Sociedad Latinoamericana en Percepción Remota y Sistemas de Información Espacial

The Latin American Society in Remote Sensing and Spatial Information Systems, SELPER, is a non-profit technical-scientific association that started its activities in Ecuador in 1980. There are currently nine National Chapters in Latin America (Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Haiti, Mexico and Venezuela) and Special Chapters in countries with advanced development in Remote Sensing and that support the development of different activities carried out by the Society, for instance, Spain, France and Italy. Its headquarters and international board are itinerant and composed of representatives from different countries (<https://selper.info/>).

SELPER Brasil (<https://selperbrasil.org.br/>) was created on November 19, 1989 and is ruled by its own duly notarized bylaws. Since its creation, the Society has been encouraging the development, study and research in the fields of remote sensing, geosciences and photogrammetry, in the broader sense, covering the phases of acquisition, treatment, analysis and interpretation of data, as well as the respective dissemination of the information obtained.

SELPER Brasil helps raising awareness and building knowledge in those areas, by promoting:

- Events, such as, webinars, workshops, symposia, lectures and other related activities;
- National and international training programs;
- Face-to-face and online learning activities;
- Production of technical-scientific works;
- Cooperation and exchange of experiences, knowledge and interaction among experts, students and professionals in the field, positively contributing to the Brazilian community and its institutions.

SELPER may associate with other technical-scientific societies, directly or indirectly involved in remote sensing technology, seeking a mutually beneficial relationship, bringing together persons and entities engaged in research, development, applications and operations.
